| ACKNOWLEDGMENTS .....   | 11  |
| INTRODUCTION: THE LOGIC OF THE IMAGINATION:SPACE, TIME, PREDICTIONS.....            | 13  |
| 1. The Subject Matter of the Imagination .....  | 15  |
| 2. Content Summary .....  | 25  |
| 3. Methodology .....  | 27  |
| I. THE EXPRESSIVE POWER OF THE MINDAND ITS VARIETIES .....                          | 31  |
| 1. Ideas as Dispositions to Form Expressions .....                                      | 33  |
| 2. Expression and its Interpretation.....   | 35  |
| 3. Cognitive Desiderata for a Theory of Expression.....                                 | 39  |
| 4. Expression and Blind Thought.....  | 43  |
| 5. Expression and its Metaphysical Meaning.....   | 51  |
| 6. Is Cognitive and Epistemic Use of Expression Univocal? .....                         | 53  |
| 7. Conclusion .....   | 54  |
| II. THE GROUNDWORK OF THE IMAGINATION .....   | 57  |
| 1. The Synthetic Work of Imagination.....   | 59  |
| 2. The Logic of the Imagination, its Cognitive Constraints.....                         | 67  |
| 3. Segmentation and Simplification .....  | 73  |
| 4. Confused Sensation and Distinguished Perception.....                                 | 77  |
| 5. Conclusion .....   | 83  |
| III. INTERLUDE: IMAGINATION AND REALITY .....   | 85  |
| 1. Segmentation, Simplification, and the Metaphysical Groundfor Their Reality ..... | 87  |
| 2. Sensations as Expressions .....  | 92  |
| 3. Segmentation as Expression.....  | 95  |
| 4. Combinatoric of Elements vs Propositional Containment.....                           | 98  |
| 5. Coherence, Motion, and the Metaphysical Constitution of Bodies .....                 | 101 |
| 6. Coherence and Distinct Perception .....  | 110 |
| 7. Conclusion .....   | 112 |

|   |     |

| IV. FIRST- AND SECOND-ORDER COHERENCE I:TIME, SPACE, AND TYPES..... | 115 |
| 1. What are Types?.....   | 116 |
| 2. Nature as the Intentional Object of Types.....                       | 125 |
| 3. Space and Time: A First-Order Coherence.....                         | 129 |
| 4. Space, Time, Causation: Leibniz's Empirical Principle.....           | 133 |
| 5. Conclusion.....  | 138 |
| V. FIRST- AND SECOND-ORDER COHERENCE II:MODALITIES AND TYPES.....   | 139 |
| 1. First-Order Coherence and its Limits.....                            | 141 |
| 2. First-Order Coherence and Modalities.....                            | 145 |
| 3. Second-Order Coherence and its Constraints.....                      | 152 |
| 4. Conclusion.....  | 159 |
| VI. SIMILARITY, MOVEMENT, AND THE INTERIORIZATIONOF TYPES.....      | 161 |
| 1. How do we Interiorize Types?.....                                    | 162 |
| 2. Similarity and the Interiorization of Types.....                     | 164 |
| 3. Similarity, Abstraction, and General Notions.....                    | 167 |
| 4. Similarity, Abstraction, General Notions in New Essays.....          | 174 |
| 5. Imagination as a Combinatoric Faculty.....                           | 180 |
| 6. Conclusion.....  | 185 |
| VII. WHY TYPES ARE NOT CONCEPTS.....                                    | 187 |
| 1. Types vs. Concepts – Extension vs. Intension.....                    | 189 |
| 2. Leibniz's Conceptualism.....   | 194 |
| 3. Alia est rerum, alia terminorum divisio.....                         | 199 |
| 4. From Types to Concepts.....  | 202 |
| 5. Types, Concepts, and Terms.....                                      | 205 |
| 6. The Conceptualist Response.....                                      | 211 |
| 7. Conclusion.....  | 212 |
| VIII. CONCEPTUALISM, REAL DISTINCTIONS, AND ERROR.....                  | 213 |
| 1. Generalizations and Natural Languages.....                           | 214 |
| 2. Generalizations and Essences.....                                    | 218 |
| 3. Logical, Metaphysical, and Physical Genus.....                       | 226 |
| 4. Mathematical and Physical Species.....                               | 237 |
| 5. On Error.....  | 242 |
| 6. Conclusion.....  | 245 |
